

Vladimir D. Mihajlović / Marko A. Janković (Hg.)

Pervading Empire

Relationality and Diversity in the Roman Provinces

POTSDAMER ALTERTUMSWISSENSCHAFTLICHE
BEITRÄGE – VOL. 73

2020. 332 pages with 42 b/w illustrations and 2 tables
€ 60,-

978-3-515-12716-5 SOFTCOVER

978-3-515-12738-7 E-BOOK

Pervading Empire addresses the issue of diversity within the Roman Empire and promotes interpretations that go beyond general and often abstract theoretical framings. The baseline of the volume is the notion that reality is created by the endless and multi-directional relations of different human and inhuman actors, and that the sorts and modes of correlations create specific phenomena. The volume offers a variety of theoretically and methodologically well-informed geographical, chronological and thematic case studies, written by established and emerging specialists in the field of Roman Studies, on a range of different research questions such as the integration in the Roman world, inter-cultural perceptions, (mis)communications, transfers and exchanges, transformations of social structures and landscape, patterns of consumption and related identities and the dynamics in the sphere of religion among others. Thereby, Pervading Empire demonstrates the complex and fluctuating nature of the Roman world and emphasizes the fertility of such approaches within Roman Studies.

CONTRIBUTORS

Uroš Matić, Alka Domić Kunić, Inés Sastre, Antonio Rodríguez-Fernández, Vladimir D. Mihajlović, Ilaria Trivelloni, Marko A. Janković, Martin Pitts, Siân Thomas, Danijel Dzino & Luka Boršić, Milan Savić & Dimitrije Marković, Francesca Mazzilli, Nenad Marković, Jörg Rüpke, Ton Derks, Ghislaine van der Ploeg, Nirvana Silnović

THE EDITORS

Vladimir D. Mihajlović (University of Novi Sad, Serbia) is an archaeologist working in the field of late Iron Age and Roman studies with special interest in the Balkans. His area of research includes theoretical archaeology, funerary archaeology, social structure, ethnicity and identity studies.

Marko A. Janković (University of Belgrade, Serbia) is an archaeologist whose field of interest is focused on the Roman archaeology of the Balkans, mainly on the archaeology of leisure, funerary practices, the issues of social status within past societies and the history of the discipline.

Franz Steiner
Verlag

Please order here:
service@steiner-verlag.de