Medical Philologies / Medizinische Philologien

Edited by Thomas Emmrich, Dieter Heimböckel, Csongor Lőrincz, Julia Pröll, Maren Scheurer and Sophie Witt

The book series Medical Philologies / Medizinische Philologien belongs to the broad field of Medical Humanities. However, by focusing on the foundation of all disciplines and topics that comprise them, namely language and its philological understanding, it initiates a project with sharper contours. From an interdisciplinary, comparative, and theoretically advanced perspective, this series is dedicated to the entire international textual corpus of issues relating synchronically and diachronically to medicine and the medical. The emphasis of the contributions will be on 'non-literary' and 'literary' texts which discuss medical themes and their textuality, including their aesthetic, narrative, and rhetorical devices. In addition to original contributions, translations and new editions of texts with a medical subject-matter will appear in the series.

»The Leading Series on the Poetics of Medical Knowledge.«
