Table of Contents

Acknowledgements 7
Bibliographic Abbreviations and Editions of Sources 9
Philological Abbreviations and Transliteration Conventions 11

Chapter 1: A History of Research 21
1.1 Introduction 21
1.2 Early Classical Scholarship: Delbrück, Meyer, and the Specialists 22
1.3 Broad Works 1962–1983: Hignett, Burn, Green, Rahe 26
1.4 Alternatives to the Classical Tradition 30
1.5 The Achaemenid History Workshops and the Encyclopaedia Iranica 33
1.6 Western and Eastern Ways of War 35
1.7 Hellenistic Warfare as Cultural Synthesis 40
1.8 The First Monographs: Bittner, Head, and Sekunda 41
1.9 Scholarship Since 1992 46
1.9.1 The Classicists' Tradition Since 1992 46
1.9.2 Alternative Approaches Since 1992 48
1.9.3 A Sense of Aporia 2005–2018 51
1.10 Achaemenid Army Studies, Roman Army Studies, and Early Greek Warfare 54
1.11 Aims of the Work 61
1.12 Scope of the Work 63

Chapter 2: The Ancestors of Achaemenid Armies 65
2.1 Introduction 65
2.2 Setting the Scope 65
2.2.1 Chronological Scope 65
2.2.2 Geographical Scope 66
2.3 Methodology 67
2.4 The Scale of Warfare 69
2.5 Origin of Soldiers 73

2.6 Types of Troops 77
2.6.1 Dezső's Model of Assyrian Troop Types 77
2.6.2 Ratios between Different Troop Types 79
2.6.3 Organization 81
2.7 Life on Campaign 83
2.8 Combat Mechanics 85
2.8.1 Skirmishes 90
2.8.2 Sieges 90
2.8.3 Success and Failure 95
2.9 Technology 96
2.9.1 Chariots 97
2.9.2 Aramaic 100
2.9.3 Iron 101
2.9.4 Hand Weapons 104
2.9.5 Armour 106
2.9.6 Composite Bows 108
2.9.7 Organizational Technologies 110
2.9.8 Neither Revolution nor Stability 110
2.10 Conclusion 111

Chapter 3: Kings at War: The Perspective of the Royal Inscriptions 115
3.1 The Cyrus Cylinder and Babylonian Royal Inscriptions 115
3.1.1 Who Spoke and Wrote Late Babylonian? 117
3.1.2 Who Heard and Read Royal Inscriptions? 120
3.1.3 The Relationship between Ideology and Practice 123
3.2 Teispid Ideology 125
3.2.1 The Cyrus Cylinder 126
3.2.2 Other Sources for Teispid Ideology 132
3.3 Achaemenid Ideology 133
3.3.1 Why Did Darius Become King? His Own Answer 135
3.3.2 The Model of People and Land in DB 136
3.3.3 The Cause of War at Behistun 139
3.3.4 Actors at Behistun 140
3.3.5 Organization and Equipment of Armies in Behistun 141
3.3.6 The Sinews of War 142
3.3.7 Initiative 143
3.3.8 Decisive Battle 144
3.3.9 Lack of Interest in Details of Armies or Fighting 147
3.3.10 Capture and Punishment of Ringleaders 148

3.3.11 Space, Time, and Empire at Behistun 149
3.3.12 Palace Art 150
3.4 Conclusion 153

Chapter 4: Commoners at War: the Perspective of Letters and Documents 155
4.1 Introduction 155
4.2 Methodological Problems Posed by Documents 157
4.3 UCP 9/3 269 ff.: The Gadal-Jâma Contract 159
4.4 The Ḫaṭru Organizations 164
4.5 Soldiers Outside the Ḫaṭru Organizations 167
4.5.1 Temple Dependents 167
4.5.2 Citizen Soldiers 168
4.5.3 Chaldean Tribes Living Outside the Cities 170
4.5.4 Contingents from the Subject Dominions 171
4.5.5 Mercenaries, Military Colonists, or Wandering Experts 172
4.5.6 The Gardu Troops 175
4.6 Service and Substitution 177
4.7 Ethnicity and Service 179
4.8 Bowmen, Horsemen, and Charioteers 183
4.9 Equipping the Troops 187
4.10 The Muster at Uruk 192
4.11 Life Ina Madākti 194
4.11.1 Activities of Soldiers 194
4.11.2 Organizing, Feeding, and Paying 195
4.11.3 Nostoi 202
4.12 Theories of Decline 203
4.12.1 Overtaxation and Military Decline: The Rahe/Lane Fox Thesis 203
4.12.2 Challenging the Premises of the Rahe/Lane Fox Thesis 205
4.12.3 The Feudal Theory 215
4.13 Conclusion 218

Chapter 5: Material Remains: The Perspective of Archaeology 223
5.1 Introduction 223
5.2 Obstacles 227
5.3 Notable Sites 229
5.3.1 Persis and the Zagros 229
5.3.2 Babylonia 232
5.3.3 Syria 234
5.3.4 The Levant 235

5.3.5 Egypt 237
5.3.6 Eastern Iran 238
5.3.7 Cyprus 239
5.3.8 Anatolia 240
5.3.9 Aegean 243
5.3.10 Objects Of Unknown Origin 246
5.4 Classes of Evidence 248
5.5 Larger Themes 252
5.6 Conclusion 257

Chapter 6: Greek Literature, and the Army in Action 261
6.1 Introduction 261
6.2 Methodological Challenges 262
6.2.1 The Problem of Writing a 'Battle Piece' 262
6.2.2 Greek Warfare as a Moving Target 264
6.2.3 Synchronic and Diachronic Models 266
6.2.4 How Greek is the Greek Tradition? 267
6.2.5 Conflation of Reliability and Literary Skill 268
6.2.6 Facing Methodological Problems: The Scythed Chariot 269
6.3 Methodological Problems in Using the Classical Sources 278
6.3.1 Uncritical Use of Classical Sources as a Framework 278
6.3.2 Rationalizing Sources 282
6.3.3 Confusing Sources with Glosses: Xenoi at The Granicus 283
6.4 How Did the Persians Fight? Eduard Meyer's Answer 286
6.4.1 Did Persian Warfare Depend on Superior Numbers? 290
6.5 An Alternative Model of Combat Mechanics 292
6.5.1 The Problem of Labelling Persian Infantry 293
6.5.2 The Equipment of Persian Infantry in Herodotus 295
6.5.3 Equipment and Fighting Style 302
6.5.4 An Analogy for Herodotean Combat 303
6.5.5 Combat Mechanics in Later Sources 308
6.5.6 Persian Armies in the Alexander Historians 312
6.5.7 Greeks as a Cause of Change 316
6.6 Three Case Studies 319
6.6.1 Calculating The Size of Armies 319
6.6.2 The Idea of the Persians Adopting Greek Weapons 331
6.6.3 Siege Warfare 334
6.7 Conclusion 344

Chapter 7: Conclusion and Future Research 349

Bibliography 359

Index 418
Index of Assyriological Sources Cited 418
Index of Biblical Sources Cited 419
Index of Classical Sources Cited 419
Index of Words in Ancient Languages 423
Index of Persons, Places, and Technical Terms 425